Affirmation-Negation: New Perspective 914 To sum up, affirmation and negation are two sides of the same coin. Though they are opposed to each other but negation presupposes affirmation and affirmation presupposes negation in logic. Negation and statement are logically equivalent and communicatively uninterchangeable.

Affirmative Dialectics: from Logic to Anthropology Alain Badiou The fundamental problem in the philosophical field today is to find something like a new logic. We cannot begin by some considerations about politics, life, creation or action. We must first describe a new logic, or more precisely, a new dialectics. This is the way of Plato,

Self-Affirmations Provide a Broader Perspective on Self-Threat Clayton R. Critcher¹ and David Dunning² Abstract We present an "affirmation as perspective" model of how self-affirmations alleviate threat and defensiveness. Self-threats dominate the working self-concept, leading to a constricted self disproportionately influenced by the threat.

The logic of appropriateness is a perspective on how human action is to be interpreted. Action, policy making included, is seen as driven by rules of appropriate or exemplary behavior, organized into institutions. The appropriateness of rules includes both cognitive and normative components (March and Olsen 1995, 30-31).
